To prevent the union, Mrs. Halton plans to trap Lindfield herself and kill balsy's love for him by revealing him in his true colors.

This she finally accomplishes, but not without much risk and sacrifices on her part, as she herself—a widow—is likewise engaged to be married. By reason of her violent flirtation with Lindfield she gets into an extremely embarrassing position and becomes the subject of gossip. In the end, however, her conduct is vindicated. Mrs. Campbell's leading man and her principal character actor are both Americans. They are respectively John Blair and Vaughan Glaser.

Connoisseurs will not be in the least surprised at the price paid by Senator Clark, for these are some of the small number of so-called "Polonaise" rugs made to order by Persian artists for seventeenth centuries. These artists came to Italy with their goods, but the Italians did not like the patterns, and, taking the weavers to the churches, pointed to the elaborate large soroll patterns of the ceiling decoration

The Persians booked about one hundred orders from wealthy Italians and filled them after returning to their own country. But they made no more like them, for they did not care for them themselves, preferring their native Oriental patterns.
